just a blank cassette. I bought it on the way to the train." With a quick movement he tossed it through the opening at the top of the window.

Al Batross showed distress. "Gee, Praw, a blank cassette. I could have used that."

Lawson grinned at his brother-in-law, reached across, and extracted the cassette from behind the lapel of Al's jacket. He dropped it in the boy's lap. Then as he sat down he said, "Achilles, me lad, why don't you position yourself next to the outer door and keep an eye on Mr. Hattersley. From the look on his face I get the feeling he may try to duplicate my trick."
